Brooke Sharkey

Brooke Sharkey is a British Singer Songwriter, producer and poet who partially grew up in France. Love, and her connection to nature, has lead her to find a new home on the outskirts of Oslo, Norway, where she currently resides.

She writes slow evolving, poetic and introspective contemporary folk using her voice as the 'lyric carrier' and as an additional instrument. Her current influences include artists such as Kate Bush, Ane Brun, Rozi plain, Pomme, Lhasa de Sela, Sufjan Stevens, Christine and the Queens and Francois and the Atlas mountain. Daily life, dream and written poetry inspires her work (Mary Oliver, Rumi) which has lead her of recent to write her own poems. Brooke has often collaborated with local musicians to create sounds that echo'd the time and place in which the songs came forth using the unfolding of life experiences and encounters with people and the natural environment as main inspiration to her production work. Her composed lyrics often contain poetic imagery and metaphor in both English and French that reach into the themes of love, loss, grief, beauty, nature, sensuality, the body, and wonder.
